Summary: A poem about the Shinsengumi and how they were viewed by others during "Hakuouki Reimeiroku." It basically about how even heroes can be seen by others as murderers and someone weeps when killers die.

The Wolves of Mibu

The Wolves of Mibu

Even Savages,

hunting in the dead of night,

have a sense of dignity;

As blood flies,

and bodies pile up endlessly,

they will keep on fighting.

Even Wolves,

striking down their prey,

show shadows of remorse;

As dogs are killed,

and blood drips from their smiles,

they yearn for a better day.

Even Heroes,

exterminating evil men,

are in solemn truth murderers;
As darkness fades,
and people cry with joy,
tears of sadness will remain... bitter feeling will remain... scalding hatred will remain...
And when the last sword is drawn, when snake's blood taints the ground and when the sakura falls once more;
The heroes will be the Wolves, the savages, of Mibu
